

CHSC6150 STUDENT LEARNING OBJECTIVES:

- Examine health promotion practices under a national health insurance system that provides universal insurance coverage to all people.
- Examine and critique the impact of culture differences on various community health practices.
- Examine factors related to disaster preparedness for earthquake and typhoon in Taiwan situation.
- Identify and analyze global economic, immigration, politics and culture factors that can effect community health practices at international, national and local levels.
- Identify various alternative community health strategies that can be applied at different culture settings.
- Examine the role of race, ethnicity, gender, religion, culture affecting community health practices.
- Examine how East and West think and act differently in solving community health problems.
- Examine the use of oriental diet, Chinese medicine, and Buddhist meditation as alternative strategies to health promotion.
- Analyze and develop community health strategies with a partner of different culture and language orientation.
- Apply community health theories and principals to present cross-culture health programs to solve health problems identified in the field study.